Information

The Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care is the provincial government body to whom health units are primarily responsible. It is charged with the responsibility of administering such legislation as the Health Protection and Promotion Act (1990), the Health Insurance Act (1990), the Commitment to the Future of Medicare Act (2004), and the Public Hospitals Act (1990) Immunization of School Pupils Act (1990).

The role of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care in the organization and operation of health units is well established in the Health Protection and Promotion Act, which defines its responsibilities, in regard to such matters as changes in health unit by-laws, financing, inspection, construction of facilities, etc.

The Population and Public Health Division is the Ministry's primary liaison with boards of health and staff of health units. The function of the Population and Public Health Division is to promote good health, to monitor the health status of Ontarians and to control the spread of disease. It does this in part through financial support and expert advice to the 34 local public health units or boards of health which conduct local programs and, in part, by developing its own province-wide programs. The Population and Public Health Division is equally concerned with preventing disease, by measures ranging from better sanitation to vaccinations for school children and provides funding for local official health agencies in these areas.

As part of its mandate, the Division has broad responsibilities to support the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Furthermore, it is responsible for informing other branches within the government on public health issues, and liaising with other provinces, territories and the federal government regarding public health in Ontario.

The Population and Public Health Division of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care provides leadership and support to public health through:

- 1) The development of Ontario Public Health Standards and protocols for program delivery and consultative and education support to facilitate their implementation.
- 2) Support services to health units and corporate management.
